The Main Street school house is having the roof on the back rooms raised, making two additional rooms, the change made necessary by the enrollment of pupils due to the growth of the village. ## WESTERLY

There are numerous reports made to Police Chief Brown of the speeding of automobiles on the Watch Hill road. It is known that all rules of the road are violated and that there has not been a repetition of fatalities of the past during the present is not due to any improvement on the part of automobile operators as to their judgment in operation. The police have no adequate means of detecting this class of violators, but provision has been made to assist the careful drivers and pedestrians for the balance of the season, at least. If the plan proves a success in reducing the speed of the cars, it will probably become a permanent acquisition to the police force.

The police have hired for the season a sidecar motorcycle and have engaged its owner to operate the same, to be used with special reference to the traffic service. A special constable has been engaged to accompany the driver and his special duty is to detect and arrest automobile operators who disregard the law by overspeeding. Several years ago a motorcycle cop was added to the police force for a summer season, and the result was a marked moderation in the speed of automobiles in all sections of the big town of Westerly, as police officers jurisdiction is not confined to the village.

Theodore Samuels is the owner of the large house and grounds in Elm street, formerly known as the Wilcox place. The house and lot had a divided ownership, one-half being a legacy to the Rev. Baptist church. When Captain Nathan B. Wilcox died, November 10, 1902, he willed one-half of the property to a piece and this part was purchased by Mr. Samuels more than a year ago. Life interest in the other half was given to a brother and upon his death went to Calvary Baptist church. This brother died several years ago, but the church did not take over the property until after the death of his widow. Mr. Samuels negotiated for the purchase of this half of the property and the sale is practically consummated, although the deed of transfer has not been recorded.

There is no real jitney service in Westerly, the nearest akin to it being the motor bus on the Watch Hill road with a charge of three jits for the ride. There is, however, quite a taxi-cab service with a rate of 25 cents per passenger to Pawcatuck and within the compact part of the town of Westerly. The trolley has been a detriment rather than a benefit to the taxi-cab service, and their business is below normal by reason of a reduction of the number of trolleys in Westerly caused by the suspension of trolley traffic.

The Young People's Societies of the Seventh Day Baptist denomination according to the report of the general treasurer, shows a total of sixty-nine societies in the seven associations. The report of the apportionment of the Young People's Board for the 1918-1919 conference year, shows these churches of the Eastern association have paid their apportionment, as follows: Waterford, $5; Pawcatuck, $44; Second Westerly, $3.60; There is due from the First Hopkinton $49.20; Second Hopkinton, $10.60; Rockville $13.50.

A local trolleyman has been assigned to special duty in the police department.

The regular taxicab rate to Watch Hill or Stonington is $1.50.

The sewer contractors are paying laborers forty-five cent an hour and there is a scarcity of that class of labor. There is no real cause for able-bodied men to be idle in Westerly.

With no trolley service and wet weather, the proprietors of stores and amusement places at the local beaches played in hard luck last week.

"Many mechanics would gladly accept positions on the trolley roads at the present pay, were it not for the union protection of organized labor," so sayeth a local machinist who served a full time apprenticeship.

The customary number of Saturday shoppers from Stonington was materially diminished by lack of trolley accommodation. The steam train service did not afford adequate relief.

Providence strikers demanded 75 cents an hour, offered to accept 55 cents, but refused to accept 53 cents an hour. A Westerly man who was in Providence, Saturday said: "The strike in Westerly is of but little consequence, compared with the strike in the city, where thousands of people are inconvenienced, and business almost as still as the trolley cars."

Standing in front of the Washington Trust company, Saturday afternoon a cop counted just 94 automobiles parked in Broad and High streets, including eight taxicabs all in a row, and not a trolley car in sight.

There was no Sunday rush to Pleasant View and Watch Hill.

Another striker was at work lawn mowing Saturday at less than forty-two cents an hour.

Even the patronage of the Westerly public library has lessened since the trolley strike began.
